

Has anyone realized that annoyance is not the only reason for being on the no call list. I have a handicapped daughter, she is 28 years old and has Down's Syndrome, her IQ is around 7 years old. She answers our phone and on more than one occasion a telephone solicitor has talked her into order, pledging money or set up an appointment. She can stay by herself during the day, but I think it is unconscionable for solicitors to take advantage of her or other handicapped people. The do not call list should stay!!!
